Data subject's right to check personal data

A data subject may ask Tukes whether personal data on him or her has been entered in a Tukes register, and if such data exists, what kind of information has been registered (data subject's right to obtain access to the information). The data subject may ask for any inaccurate or erroneous data to be rectified.

Data subject's right to require erasure of data

The data subject shall have the right to demand that the controller erase any personal data concerning him or her. The data subject shall have the right to cancel his or her consent at any time.

Data subject's right to require restriction of processing

The data subject shall have the right to require the data controller to restrict the processing of his or her personal data if the data subject denies the correctness of the data until Tukes has ensured that the data is correct.

Data subject's right to transfer data from one system to another

Persons entered in Tukes' registers do not have the right to transfer data from one system to another.

Data subject's right to object to data processing

The data subject shall not have the right to object to the processing of data concerning him or her.

Automated individual decision-making and profiling

Automated individual decision-making and profiling are not the only methods used by Tukes in its registers.

Informing data subjects about a personal data breach

If the personal data breach is likely to constitute a high risk to the data subject's rights and freedoms, Tukes shall inform the data subject about the personal data breach without undue delay.

Consequences of not providing personal data

The person cannot attend an event organised by Tukes.

Data subject's right to lodge a complaint with the supervisory authority

The data subject shall have the right to lodge a complaint with the Data Protection Ombudsman if he or she is of the opinion that data protection regulation has been breached during the processing of his or her personal data.
